I just bought the Netgear WG602 access point and the Netgear WG511 54G Wireless PC Card. I am very impressed and both items work great. All I did was connect the ethernet cord (that comes with the access point) from my existing D-Link wired router and into the Netgear access point.

As stated my other thread, I'm having serious issues with my wireless under Windows 7. I have my laptop, desktop PC and PS3 in one room...would I be able to plug in a 4 port EOP switch in this room for those 3 devices, another single port in the room where the router is and connect to that, and have a successful network?

EOP (Ethernet over Power) Sticky - Networking

@Rutger The AP scan function was actually introduced with the latest firmware (11.14.1.43). It does work. Some reported that it returned the wrong MAC address, but it actually returns the wireless MAC address of the router which is usually the Ethernet MAC+1.
